10 DR. A. CEMAL EKIN, 11 Individually and on behalf of similarly situated individuals,

12 Plaintiff,

13 v.
14 AMAZON SERVICES, LLC,

15 Defendant.

16 CASE NO. C14-0244-JCC

17 ORDER GRANTING 18 DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO 19 COMPEL ARBITRATION

20 This matter comes before the Court on Defendant Amazon Services, LLC's (Amazon's)
21 Motion to Compel Arbitration (Dkt. No. 24). Having thoroughly considered the parties' briefing 22 and the relevant record, the Court finds oral argument unnecessary and hereby GRANTS the 23 Motion for the reasons explained herein.

24 I. BACKGROUND

25 This suit arises from the operation of Amazon's Prime service. From 2005 to February 26 2014, a period inclusive of the time period relevant to this suit, Amazon offered its Prime subscribers free two-day shipping, discounted one-day shipping, and weekend shipping on millions of eligible products, for a $79 annual fee. (Ressmeyer Decl., Dkt. No. 25 at ¶2 & Ex. A-B.) Prime eligible products are those that are sold by Amazon or that are sold by third-party merchants participating in the Fulfillment by Amazon (FBA) program. (Haberkorn Decl., Dkt.

1 No. 26 at ¶3.) Customers signing up for Amazon Prime must accept Amazon's Prime Terms and 2 Conditions (T&Cs), by clicking a button next to text that states "you acknowledge that you have 3 read and agree to the Amazon Prime Terms and Conditions," the underlined portion of this 4 sentence providing a hyperlink that directs customers to the T&Cs. (Motion to Compel 5 Arbitration, Dkt. No. 24 at 2-3.) These T&Cs incorporate Amazon's Conditions of Use (COU).
 6 (Id.) Customers also accept the COU every time they make a purchase on Amazon.com; to make 7 a purchase, customers must click a button next to text that says "by placing your order, you agree 8 to Amazon.com's privacy notice and conditions of use," the underlined portions also bearing 9 hyperlinks to the eponymous documents. (Id.)

10 Since August 19, 2011, Amazon's COU have included a binding arbitration agreement.

11 (Id.)

12 Both Plaintiff Dr. A. Cemal Ekin and Interested Party Ms. Marcia Burke have been 13 Amazon Prime members since 2006 and 2007, respectively. (Motion to Compel Arbitration, 14 Dkt. No. 24 at 3-4.) Although the arbitration agreement was not part of the COU to which the 15 parties agreed when they initially joined Amazon, Plaintiffs have actively renewed<sup>1</sup> their Prime 16 membership several times, both after the August 19, 2011 addition of the arbitration agreement 17 to the COU, and after the filing of the Complaint in this suit. (Id.) Further, both Dr. Ekin and 18 Ms. Burke agreed to the arbitration provision in the COU several times by purchasing 116 items 19 and 555 items from Amazon, respectively, since August 2011, including after the filing of the 20 Complaint. (Id. at 4-5.)

21 Amazon's arbitration agreement provides that

22 Any dispute or claim relating in any way to your use of any Amazon 23 Service, or to any products or services sold or distributed by Amazon or

 25 <sup>1</sup> It appears that Ms. Burke's renewals of her Prime membership occurred automatically, but that 26 she did not endeavor to cancel this feature after filing the Complaint. Dr. Ekin, it appears, actively re-signed up for Prime after canceling his membership, once in June 2012 and once in July 2013. (Haberkorn Decl., Dkt. No. 26 at ¶13.)

1 through Amazon.com will be resolved by binding arbitration, rather than 2 in court. . . We [both Amazon and any customer] each agree that any 3 dispute resolution proceedings will be conducted only on an individual 4 basis and not in a class, consolidated, or representative action.

5 (Id. at 5-6 (emphasis added).) In the arbitration agreement, Amazon agrees to pay all arbitrator 6 fees and costs for claims under $10,000 and to unilaterally waive its claims for attorneys' fees.

7 (Id.) Arbitrations are conducted by the American Arbitration Association, pursuant to its rules 8 governing consumer-related disputes. (Id. at 6.) Customers may choose to arbitrate in their 9 hometowns, another convenient location, or may also arbitrate by telephone or through written 10 submissions. (Id.) The arbitration agreement also provides that any disputes are to be governed 11 by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA), associated federal law, and the laws of Amazon's 12 principal place of business (Washington state). (Id.)

13 In February of 2014, Plaintiff filed a putative Rule 23(b)(3) class action suit, asserting 14 claims for breach of contract and violations of Washington's Consumer Protection Act, 15 stemming from what Dr. Ekin alleges was Amazon's practice of encouraging FBA-vendors to 16 increase the base cost of their products to recapture the revenue lost from providing free shipping 17 to Prime members. (First Amended Complaint, Dkt. No. 5 at ¶¶3.4; 6.1-6.3; 7.1-7.3.) The 18 putative class consists of all those persons and entities who became Amazon Prime members 19 between October 24, 2007 and February 22, 2011, the period before Amazon's arbitration 20 agreement became part of its COU. (Id. at ¶5.1.) Again, both the putative class representative, 21 Dr. Ekin, and interested party Ms. Burke renewed their Prime memberships several times and 22 purchased hundreds of items after the end of this class period and even after the filing of the 23 Complaint, each time agreeing to COU that, after August 2011, included the arbitration 24 agreement.<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs do not, in their discussion of commonality and predominance or in any 25 other section of the Amended Complaint, provide the Court with any idea of how many of the 26 putative class members likewise assented to the arbitration agreement after the relevant class

2 II. DISCUSSION

3 A. Legal Standard

4 Since the Supreme Court's seminal ruling in AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 131 S.
 5 Ct. 1740 (U.S. 2011), federal courts are limited in their discretion to disregard a valid agreement 6 to arbitrate. In Concepcion, the Court affirmed the binding and state law-preempting nature of 7 the Federal Arbitration Act's Section 2, which provides that agreements to arbitrate are "valid, 8 irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the 9 revocation of any contract." 9 U.S.C. § 2.

10 The Ninth Circuit has followed the precedent set by Concepcion and its progeny,<sup>4</sup> 11 repeatedly issuing opinions confirming that the FAA preempts state laws declaring certain 12 arbitration agreements to be unconscionable, and thus unenforceable. For instance, in Coneff v.
 13 AT&T Corp., 673 F.3d 1155, 1160-61 (9th Cir. 2012), the Ninth Circuit held that the FAA 14 preempted Washington's version of the California rule that the Supreme Court struck down in 15 Concepcion. And in Ferguson v. Corinthian Colleges, Inc., 733 F.3d 928, 935 (9th Cir. 2013), 16 the Court relied on Italian Colors to strike down a California rule declaring arbitration 17 agreements per se invalid when they prevented the litigation of representative claims for public 18 injunctive relief.

19 Thus, this Court is firmly bound by the FAA in adjudicating this Motion. The FAA 20 requires courts to compel arbitration if (1) a valid agreement to arbitrate exists, and (2) the 21 dispute falls within the scope of that agreement. Chiron Corp. v. Ortho Diagnostic Systems, Inc., 22 207 F.3d 1126, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000). If both of these two prongs are fulfilled, then the FAA

 25 <sup>3</sup> This would pose problems with regard to class certification, if the Court was not compelled by the FAA to order arbitration on this matter.

26 <sup>4</sup> Including, inter alia, American Express Co. v. Italian Colors Restaurant, 133 S. Ct. 2304 (2013); Marmet Health Care Center, Inc. v. Brown, 132 S. Ct. 1201, 1203-04 (2012).

1 “leaves no place for the exercise of discretion by a district court, but instead mandates that 2 district courts shall direct the parties to proceed to arbitration.” Id.; see also Dean Witter
 3 Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 218 (1985); Kilgore v. Keybank, N.A., 718 F.3d 1052, 1058 4 (9th Cir. 2013).

5 B. The Validity of Amazon’s Arbitration Agreement

6 Plaintiffs’ main objection to the validity of the arbitration agreement<sup>5</sup> is that Amazon 7 expressly reserves the right to change, without notice, consent, or a refund, its Prime T&Cs and 8 general COU. Plaintiffs claim that under prevailing Ninth Circuit case law, this makes the 9 arbitration agreement, which is incorporated into these COU, unenforceable due to 10 unconscionability (and the FAA strictures thus inapplicable, as per 9 U.S.C. § 2’s savings 11 clause). (Plaintiffs’ Response to Amazon’s Motion to Compel Arbitration, Dkt. No. 38 at 1.)
 12 However, Plaintiffs’ argument is unavailing for several reasons.

13 First, the cases cited by Plaintiffs do not actually support their assertion that Ninth Circuit 14 precedent establishes that unilateral reservations of the right to change contract terms makes such 15 contracts illusory, and thus per se invalid. Plaintiffs’ argument on this issue largely rests on 16 Pokorny v. Quixtar, Inc., 601 F.3d 987, 997-99 (9th Cir. 2010) and Ingle v. Circuit City Stores, 17 Inc., 328 F.3d 1165, 1179 (9th Cir. 2003).<sup>6</sup> However, in these cases, the Ninth Circuit simply

19 <sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs do not dispute that they accepted the arbitration agreement that was part of the Prime 20 T&Cs and the Amazon COU numerous times after August 2011, through both Dr. Ekin’s and 21 Ms. Burke’s myriad active purchases and renewals (active in Dr. Ekin’s case) of their Prime 22 memberships, nor could they, given this District’s recognition of the Ninth Circuit rule that 23 similar “clickwrap” agreements are completely enforceable. See e.g., Peters v. Amazon Services, 24 LLC, 2 F. Supp. 3d 1165, 1170 (W.D. Wash., Nov. 5, 2013). For this reason, the Court finds 25 inapplicable to this case Plaintiffs’ references to the fact that the FAA does not require 26 compliance with arbitration arguments to which there was not mutual assent, see Plaintiffs’
 Response, Dkt. No. 38 at Section III(A).

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff cites other authorities in support of this proposition, but they are not binding on this Court. However, these non-binding authorities are not, on the whole, even persuasive because they may all be distinguished from the present suit on several salient points. For instance, in In re Zappos.com, Inc., 893 F. Supp. 2d 1058, 1063 (D. Nev. 2012), which features very prominently in Plaintiffs’ briefing, the unenforceable arbitration agreement was forced on those

1 included the presence of a unilateral change-in-terms provision to be one of several factors
 2 supporting a finding of unconscionability and thus unenforceability. For instance, in Ingle, the 3 Ninth Circuit found an employment arbitration agreement unenforceable on numerous grounds, 4 including that it was one-sided (employer claims against employees were not subject to the 5 agreement), it contained a loser-pays provision, and it precluded several types of relief that 6 would be available in court, in addition to the fact that it allowed Circuit City to unilaterally 7 modify the arbitration agreement. 328 F.3d at 1174-79. The Ingle court “dr[ew] no conclusion 8 as to whether [the change-of-terms provision], by itself, renders the contract unenforceable.” Id.
 9 at 1179 fn. 23. Similarly, in Pokorny, the Ninth Circuit found an agreement between a 10 corporation and its distributors to be unenforceable for several reasons, such as the inclusion of a 11 “first-peak” at claims provision, a truncated limitations period, mandatory confidentiality, fee-12 shifting provisions, and even a provision giving preference to arbitrators that had been trained by 13 the defendant corporation itself, in addition to a provision reserving the right to change the terms 14 of the agreement. 601 F.3d at 998-1004. As Defendant points out, “neither Washington courts 15 nor the Ninth Circuit have ever held an arbitration agreement unenforceable solely because it is 16 in a contract that allows changes. To rule otherwise would be to invalidate countless arbitration 17 agreements across the country.” (Defendant’s Reply, Dkt. No. 41 at 1.)

18 Further, Washington and Ninth Circuit courts have a history of enforcing contracts 19 containing change-in-terms provisions. See e.g., Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Carey, 395 F. Appx.
 20 476, 479 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding that “Alaska Airline’s unilateral right to modify the terms of 21 the Mileage Plan do[es] not make the plan an illusory contract”). In Washington, a contract is 22 illusory only if it lacks all consideration and mutuality of obligation, e.g., the promisor has no
 23 obligations with regard to any parts of the contract. See e.g., Gress v. Conover Ins., Inc., 494 F.
 24 Appx. 772, 774 (9th Cir. 2012) (“The fact that [defendant] retained the right to unilaterally

 26 plaintiffs through a “browsewrap” “agreement” which required absolutely no affirmative action on the part of consumers.

1 modify the contract did not render the agreement illusory, because the performance obligations
 2 remained fixed."); Quadrant Corp. v. Am. States Ins. Co., 154 Wash. 2d 165, 184-85 (2005)
 3 (explaining that illusory contracts are those without any consideration). This is not the case here, 4 where the contract between customers and Amazon created several performance obligations for 5 Amazon, the alleged breach of which forms the basis of this suit. Thus, there is no binding legal 6 authority compelling a finding that the reservation of the right to change the terms makes the 7 COU/arbitration agreement unenforceable.

8 Second, in addition to the absence of any elements making the agreement per se 9 unconscionable, the arbitration agreement's terms hardly strike this Court as unfair. For 10 instance, the arbitration agreement obliges Amazon to pay all arbitrator fees and costs for claims 11 under $10,000, to unilaterally waive its claims for attorneys' fees, to submit to arbitration in any 12 location chosen by the consumer, and also allows consumers to arbitrate by telephone or written 13 submission. (See Motion to Compel Arbitration, Dkt. No. 24 at 5-6.) Arbitration is conducted 14 not according to some rules created by Amazon, but rather by the American Arbitration 15 Association's published and accessible rules. The external, neutral American Arbitration 16 Association's arbitrators preside over the arbitration.

17 Third, this agreement misconstrues Defendant's demand for arbitration. Defendant is not 18 arguing that the pre-August 2011 COU to which Plaintiffs agreed have been changed to include 19 the arbitration agreement. Rather, Amazon argues that the post-August 2011 COU to which 20 Plaintiffs agreed on numerous occasions, and which have featured arbitration agreements from 21 their inception, bind Plaintiffs.<sup>7</sup> By arguing thus, Defendant renders its ability to change extant

 24 <sup>7</sup> "Amazon did not change either agreement to impose arbitration on Plaintiffs or to change the 25 terms of arbitration. Rather, Plaintiffs agreed to arbitration each time they accepted the COU 26 anew – more than 300 times in all." (Defendant's Reply, Dkt. No. 41 at 1.) Plaintiffs' arguments that there was no affirmative agreement to arbitrate (id. at Section III(A)) are not well-founded, given that Plaintiffs offer no theory for rejecting Amazon's assertion that Plaintiffs accepted the arbitration agreement every time they made a purchase subsequent to August 2011.

1 COU without notice irrelevant, as the COU upon which Amazon's Motion is based were 2 presented to and agreed to by both Plaintiffs, each and every time they made a purchase after 3 August 2011.<sup>8</sup>

4 The fact that Amazon did not, in fact, use its allegedly-unfettered power to change the 5 terms to "alter[] the dispute resolution process after a dispute, or potential dispute, has arisen," 6 (Plaintiffs' Response, Dkt. No. 38 at 15), renders Plaintiffs' remaining validity arguments 7 irrelevant. Plaintiffs' lack-of-savings-clause argument (id. at Section III(C)(3)) is moot.
 8 Further, as Amazon points out, such reservation of terms-changing rights is in fact "fettered" and 9 restricted by the universal requirements of good faith and fair dealing. Plaintiff's failure to 10 provide notice of a change of terms argument (id. at Section III(C)(4)) is likewise moot, at the 11 point that Amazon is basing its Motion on the unchanged COU to which Dr. Ekin assented after 12 August 2011. The failure of Plaintiffs' arguments along these lines is supported by this District's 13 decision in L.A. Fitness International, LLC v. Harding, in which Judge Bryan rejected the similar 14 claims of those plaintiffs and held that when a defendant seeks to enforce an arbitration 15 agreement that has not been changed, a challenge on the basis of unconscionability due to 16 change-in-terms provisions is irrelevant, because the never-invoked change-in-terms provision 17 can be severed, allowing the rest of the contract and agreement to stand. 2009 WL 4545079 at 18 *4 (W.D. Wash., Nov. 25, 2009). Finally, the fact that Amazon bases its Motion on the COU to 19 which Dr. Ekin affirmatively assented discredits Plaintiffs' argument that Amazon did not secure 20 meaningful consent. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Dkt. No 38 at 22.)

21 Plaintiffs' alternate argument against the validity of the arbitration agreement is that 22 Amazon's failure to attach and specify the relevant arbitration rules makes the agreement 23 unenforceable for ambiguity. (Plaintiffs' Response, Dkt. No. 38 at 18-20.) However, the Court 24

25 <sup>8</sup> In doing so, Defendant implicates questions of the scope of the post-August 2011 agreement 26 and its ability to cover pre-August 2011 transactions. However, this Court finds that Amazon fulfills the second prong Chiron inquiry as well, for the reasons discussed in the ensuing section.

1 fails to see how Amazon’s reference to the AAA’s rules is at all ambiguous. The arbitration
 2 agreement provides that “[t]he arbitration will be conducted by the American Arbitration 3 Association (AAA) under its rules, including the AAA’s Supplementary Procedures for 4 Consumer-Related Disputes.” (Ressmeyer Decl., Dkt. No. 25, Ex. E at 24.) The agreement 5 provides the AAA’s website and a toll-free telephone number, so that customers may obtain the 6 governing rules. (Id.) Plaintiffs’ description of the convolution, disorganization, and obstacles 7 endemic to the AAA’s website are not convincing.

8       Thus, Plaintiffs have presented this Court with no reasons for holding the arbitration 9 agreement invalid.

10      C. The Scope of Amazon’s Arbitration Agreement

11      Amazon’s arbitration agreement encompasses “any dispute or claim relating in any way 12 to your use of any Amazon Service, or to any products or services sold or distributed by Amazon 13 or through Amazon.com.” (Ressmeyer Decl., Dkt. No. 25, Ex. E at 24.) Plaintiffs do not 14 meaningfully contest that this phrasing encompasses disputes arising from both future and past 15 transactions on Amazon.com. Nor could they, consistently, given the prevailing law. As 16 Defendant points out, Chief Judge Pechman of the Western District of Washington held one year 17 ago that a similarly worded arbitration provision of Amazon was “plainly not limited to 18 prospective disputes.” Peters, 2013 WL 7872692 at *7. This District’s ruling is amply 19 supported by Ninth Circuit precedent<sup>9</sup> and the decisions of sister circuits holding specifically that 20 when arbitration agreements contain broad “relating to any dispute” language, both future and 21 past disputes are included in the scope of the arbitration agreement.<sup>10</sup>

 23
 24      <sup>9</sup> See e.g., Chiron Corp., 207 F.3d at 1131 (“any dispute” provisions are “broad and far reaching” 25 in scope).

26      <sup>10</sup> See e.g., Levin v. Alms & Assoc., Inc., 634 F.3d 260, 267-68 (4th Cir. 2011) (“[C]ourts 27 have generally applied broad ‘any dispute’ language retroactively, especially when combined 28 with language that refers to all dealings between the parties.”); *TradeComet.com, LLC v.
 29 Google, Inc.*, 435 F. Appx. 31, 34-35 (2d Cir. 2011) (“[C]ourts have found claims arising

1 Thus, the instant Prime-FBA price dispute, even though stemming from transactions
2 occurring prior to August 2011, is within the scope of the post-August 2011 arbitration
3 agreement that this Court found valid in the preceding section, and to which Plaintiffs agreed.
4 The arbitration agreement having fulfilled both prongs of the Chiron test, this Court must 5 conclude that arbitration is mandated.

6 III. CONCLUSION

7 For the foregoing reasons, Defendant's Motion to Compel Arbitration (Dkt. No. 24) is 8 GRANTED. The parties are directed to submit their claims to arbitration. In light of this Order, 9 Amazon's Motions to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 23 & 27) are stricken as moot.
